If you or your business is Online, your privacy, security and reputation are ON the line.

Databases like diamonds are forever. Anyone who uses search engines or social networking sites sacrifices a certain amount of privacy. Dialogue on Diversity's 2010 Entrepreneurship/IT Conference, along with its instruction on supplier diversity, access to capital, and other essential topics for the small/midsize enterprise, will spotlight the looming privacy menace: How the personal data on millions of people, employees, customers, consumers, children included, can be – and every day are – compromised through data breaches, and what you must do to protect your civil rights, your privacy, your company's reputation, and your customers' confidentiality.

Nationally recognized expert speakers, as part of the agenda segment on information technology for small entrepreneurs, will zero in on such practices of government agencies as affording public access to a broad variety of information – marriage certificates, wills, housing transactions, and court records, not to mention hordes of equally (or still more) intimate information held secretly! Privacy is similarly lost in the private sector as companies of all kinds collect, analyze, exploit, and – yes – share your personal information, often placing intimate data on myriad individuals with brokers and marketers, insurance companies, employers, the government, and others, all without your knowledge or consent. You will discover one fine day that your privacy has been compromised – only after you've been added to marketers' phone lists, a competitor's database, or see a promising job offer go glimmering because of your Facebook profile!

Join us in this vitally important discussion. Get useful and timely information, guiding you to valuable resources that will go far toward protecting your privacy and reducing security threats. Find out more – learn what we can do, in working together, to protect our civil rights and our diverse communities. The 2010 Entrepreneurship/IT Conference has no fee for admission, but registration is required. Register now – space is limited!
